Eshbach refocuses on student and community ties

By Justin Ritter
Staff Writer

Nineteen students met with President Janet Dudley-Eshbach Friday afternoon to discuss topics that dealt with the university and the surrounding community.

The event began with a short lunch session and a brief introduction of all participants. After the student introductions and announcements, Eshbach turned the discussion to Field Day. "I do believe students have a right to party. But we are trying to promote responsible behavior and responsible partying," Eshbach said.

Eshbach also explained the results of a recent economic impact survey, which concluded that SU pumps $350 million a year into the local Salisbury economy. "I don't know if the local community appreciates what we've got here," Eshbach said. She pointed out that it is up to the students to do a better job showing the locals that they are a responsible group of individuals.

"Culture and society takes a long time to change," said Eshbach, who studied various cultures in her collegiate days. "Keep doing what you are doing. Feed them with good stuff and we will make a change."

Eshbach then led the discussion on the direction the university is heading. She said that SU is among the top ten percent of Universities in America and that it will continue to emerge. "We will have 2 new buildings in [the next] five years," said Eshbach. The first will be a new Teacher Education and Technology Center, the second will be a new business building for the Perdue school.

Since the state government supplies only one-third of the operating budget for SU, Eshbach has focused on finding donors to keep SU moving in the right direction. Eshbach explained that finding donors "does not come easy."

According to Eshbach, this focus on recruiting sources of funding for the expanding SU budget does not leave her much time to be available at many community or student events.

She is trying to become more involved at the campus and community level in two specific ways. She hopes to teach a class next fall and she is making it a priority to attend more SU events. Eshbach will continue to have discussions over the next few weeks to further engage students on current university projects and to strengthen her rapport with the student body and their concerns.

WXSU hopes to receive $12,000 grant

In the upcoming months, the radio station hopes to continue the newly implemented "News Program" through funds gained by a University of Maryland grant.

The program airs every Monday through Friday at 3, 6 and 9 p.m. Students can stay informed on everything from campus happenings to national news.

"Continuation is determined by a $12,000 grant we are hoping to receive from University of Maryland's Journalism and Communications Program," said Rachel Carrier, WXSU's music director. "We need to upgrade some of our technology in order to better production quality and turnaround."

On overcast days, WXSU's signal reaches ten miles and with clear skies, it bumps up to about twenty. With the public's attention focused on musical variety, WXSU's impact has reached the board rooms of major radio outlets in Salisbury. Considering WXSU has only been publicly available on FM broadcast for a year, the fact that heads and radio dials are beginning to turn to the campus station is considered an accomplishment.

"It's been a good year," says Carrier. A communications student, Carrier has acted as WXSU's music director since the days when its music couldn't be heard past Holloway Hall.

"I think what sets us apart from other stations is the encouragement for our DJ's to avoid playing top ten singles only. We try to highlight not

Senior Rachel Carrier works the switchboard at the WXSU office. Carrier is the music director and plays a very active role in radio's daily broadcasts. WXSU is open to all students who have taken Writing for Broadcast, a communications class offered here at SU. They may be communication majors or just have a general interest. Internships are also available for students in the fall semesters.

EAC chairman to discuss current election policies and trends

By Jodie Lehrer

Staff Writer

Paul DeGregorio, Chairman of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) will speak to members of the Salisbury community this Wednesday about current election policies and reform.

The main topic of DeGregorio's speech will be on the current procedures and on encouragement of voting. Students and community members will have a chance to learn about the real and perceived problems with voting. Maryland, along with most other U.S. states, now uses Direct Recording Electronic voting machines, or DRE's.

"The integrity of actually casting a vote is a very important question of democracy," said Harry Basehart, co-director of the Public Affairs and Civic Engagement program.

DeGregorio will address issues of security and accuracy that voters often have with the new mechanical systems. The touch screen system used in the DRE's has caused some voters to be leery of the new method. "It's not something that's in the news," said Basehart.

In addition to explaining the new DRE's, DeGregorio will highlight the importance of registering to vote. This portion of his presentation will be mainly geared toward students. DeGregorio will also speak on the promotion of voting to all who are eligible.

Before being elected chairman of the EAC in 2006, DeGregorio served as the vice chairman in 2005, following his initial two-year term. DeGregorio's initial term began in 2003 after being nominated by President Bush, and validated by unanimous consent of the U.S. Senate.

He has been known for his numerous efforts to provide considerable assistance to the state, on behalf of the federal government, in order to improve elections and strengthen democracy.

This event is being hosted by PACE, whose main mission is to stress political and community activism. "It's part of our general interest in encouraging students to be politically active," said Basehart. EAC Chairman Paul DeGregorio will speak in the Great Hall of Holloway Hall Wednesday February 22 at 7:00 P.M.

Alcohol fuels fight

By Caroline Lee

Staff Writer

A fight broke out Saturday Feb. 11 around midnight in University Park.

The reason for the fight is still unclear though rumors suggest that racism may have played a role in fueling violence among a group of individuals. Bryan Michalak, a student at SU, said "[It was] a wasted white guy trying to fight four or five black guys."

Salisbury police could neither confirm nor deny the rumor of whether this fight was a conflict of

Five officers arrived at the scene, armed with pepper spray, though at that point the fight had already begun to disperse on its own.

Police stated that there were no weapons involved in this fight, and are rarely, if ever found in others. Cpl. Pete Tyler reported that the main problem in UP is the use of alcohol in these party scenes which provokes these incidences of violence.

No victims of the fight would speak to the police so there was no accident report filed.

SHOOTING VICTIM REMAINS IN RECOVERY

Seventy-eight year-old attorney Harry Whittington apologized to Dick Cheney for the fallout and criticism the vice president has received in the days following a hunting accident.

Whittington received wounds to his face, neck and chest and suffered a mild heart attack after a pellet entered his heart.

Vice President Cheney was aiming at a covey of quail when Whittington stepped into Cheney's shot and was struck with shot from a 28 gauge shotgun. Local Texas authorities have deemed the incident accidental and no charges have been brought up against the Vice President.

GOODBYE TO THE TELEGRAPH

Western Union delivered its last telegraph on Friday, February 10. The medium that was used to notify people of the first flight in 1903, the beginning of WWI and the deaths of family members in WWI has now been replaced by text messaging, instant messaging, the internet and cheap long distance rates. Telegraphs have been used for more than 150 years. Messages were sent by a wire, in the form of Morse code, across the country in less than a day. Telegraphs reached their peak in the 1920's and 1930's when it was cheaper to send a telegraph than to make a long distance phone call. Western Union has announced that it has made a final transition from a communications company to a finance company.

LITTLE HOPE REMAINS FOR MUDSLIDE VICTIMS

Authorities report that there is little hope of finding any survivors in Leyte, Philippines. The island was hit by a mudslide this past Friday that killed a reported 75 people. According to CNN.com, 906 people are known to be missing, and the death toll is expected to reach 1,000.

Heavy rains have hindered rescue efforts and officials report the current conditions as quicksand-like, making the use of heavy equipment impossible.

Humanitarian relief organizations have pledged financial assistance and donated basic necessities such as food and clothing.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR WORLD PEACE AND JILL CARROL

The SU Muslim Student Association is sponsoring a Day of Prayer for World Peace and for the release of American hostage Jill Carroll. Come in the Spirituality Center, Guerrieri University Center anytime throughout the day between 11-7 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 24 to say a silent prayer and write your prayer or message to be displayed on a Prayer Wall. We invite all students, faculty, staff and community from all faiths and denominations to come and say a prayer or just bring in your positive energy & thoughts for World Peace and for the release of Jill Carroll.

Students can expect to see some of those local acts at WXSU's first XSUFest on April 1 in Red Square. Along with all day concerts, students can come to eat, drink and meet some of the staff responsible for keeping it all together. A rain date is pending. Updates will be listed on WXSU's website: <http://orgs.salisbury.edu/wxsu/>.

Students can also listen to WXSU's "Entertainment Magazine." It is intended to keep students ahead of the curve in the world of celebrity gossip and local music.

The Faculty, Folks and Friends Coffeehouse, held Wednesday night at Cool Beans, gave several SU faculty members the chance to display their acoustic and vocal talents. Diana Wagner, Michael O'Loughlin and James Hatley each performed acoustic folk music for the mixed crowd of students, faculty, and community members.

The coffeehouse, held several times each semester, originated in the spring of 2005 when Wagner, the advising services coordinator for the Seidel School, realized there was no real permanent venue for folk or acoustic music in the area.

He contacted the director of auxiliary services, Paul Land, who was enthusiastic about the idea. His stating that he could play a mean dulcimer. His performance Wednesday consisted of music from the Islamic world, played on the mountain dulcimer as well as some selections on a wooden recorder.

Land began playing the dulcimer three years ago when his father passed away. The music was a tribute to his father's heritage.

Wagner is no stranger to folk music.

She is an avid acoustic musician and singer with a real passion for sharing and preserving folk music.

Starting the Faculty, Folks and Friends Coffeehouse gave her the chance to communicate this passion for folk music as well as to bring the community together and showcase the talents of her fellow faculty members.

"There are so many talented people on this campus," she stated. "I love just hauling in a sound system and getting my wonderfully gifted colleague to share their art."

Her performance Wednesday included several songs on the mountain dulcimer and acoustic guitar, accompanied by vocals.

O'Loughlin, the chair of the political science department and an experienced folk musician, was soon added to the coffeehouse line-up.

He has been involved in the music scene since high school, and has been playing in the band "Folk Heroes" since it was formed approximately 12 years ago.

"My physician played guitar and my lawyer played fiddle," he said, describing how the band originated.

O'Loughlin's performance on Wednesday consisted of acoustic guitar accompanied by vocals.

Don't be shy, ask anything!

I have these two guys in my life. Guy #1 is my boyfriend. He is very handsome and we share the same background. He has always been almost my ideal husband. He asked me to marry him and I am in the process of giving him an answer. Guy #2 is a friend who shares my passion for things in life. I always have fun with him no matter what we do. He knows I am very serious with my boyfriend and very faithful to him, but he still asked me if I would have consider dating him or marrying him. I said yes to his feelings but when I thought about it I realized that I meant every word I said. WHAT SHOULD I DO????????

Okay, there are a few things I'd like to talk about in this situation because it happens often and people don't like to admit it. I actually have a few stances on this. First I'd like to start off with the saying, "Don't leave the one you love for the one you like because in the end, the one you love would have always been there for you." This quote has so much truth in it that someone will leave and the new person will stay with them. Unfortunately, neither that person nor I can guarantee that—even if they say so. There may be many people out there who share the same interests, but that doesn't mean you should up and leave for each one that comes by. As blunt as it may seem, if you truly love your boyfriend then do not let this guy ruin something that could be wonderful for the rest of your life. However, I do have another stance. If you have a lot of doubts about the relationship that you are in and are very curious maybe you should figure out what it is you want in life. In other words, you haven't given an answer yet, why? Does this other guy really make you doubt your relationship this much? There is also something called the marriage jitters (actually I have no clue but I think it's called) where you start thinking stuff like this right before marriage. But honestly, what does this guy have that your boyfriend doesn't? Sometimes logic isn't the answer when it comes to love. You need to figure out what is love for you, and who do you love. As you can obviously see, I'm stepping on your toes on both sides of this situation. I do this because I feel that it's necessary to ask yourself serious questions. Your boyfriend just asked you to spend the rest of your life with him, this is marriage and it's nothing to be played around with. But at the same time, if you don't feel this is right maybe you can't give the answer that he would love to hear. I, unfortunately, can't and won't tell you what you should do in this situation because it's about you. I will tell you what you need though, sit and think. Marriage is not something to be dreaded, as many people seem to think. It is a blessed and wonderful thing. But is this everything that you wanted or is there more you wanted to experience? Come to terms of what IS and what ISN'T, and realize what the "what's" are so that they don't cross over to "what is". Realize what you want and maybe you can find answers about what is best for you because your feelings, emotions and opinions matter.

What the hell is up with new year's resolutions anyway? How many people just use it to motivate themselves to go to the gym with the intention of losing those few extra pounds but only end up being in the gym for a week. Honestly, some people have a set schedule in the gym and if they are only going to be there for a week then stay out of my way. I need to lose weight, and I want to be dedicated to it, but if I can't get to the gym then how am I to lose my weight?

Going to the gym isn't the only way to shape oneself. You have to eat. Maintain a regular healthy eating routine, which means you need to at least eat three times a day if possible. Going to the gym is definitely a good thing to do. But what will you do at the gym? Working out is nice, but cardio is half the battle. Cardio doesn't have to be done in the gym (if it's warm outside that is). And hey, you never know, those who actually have resolutions may actually decide that they'll stick to them. The good thing about working out is the results. Many people tend to feel better about their bodies because they know they are trying to make a positive impact, such as you are. Also, after working out one may feel more energy for the rest of the day. From time to time, if you stick to the gym, a healthy diet and a good amount of rest results will come. I would, however, suggest seeing when there are other times in your schedule so that you can make it to the gym. Of course, there are those days where it will not matter but if you are patient, you can get the workout you desire if you stay in the gym.

I'm new here and it seems like there isn't too much enthusiasm on this campus. I know there are clubs and such but how am I to know when they meet? I want to be involved in something beyond partying.

Well first thing I'd suggest to you is to ask around. Depending on what club you decide you want to join, ask around and see if people know about it. SGA meetings are held and usually contain many of the club members there. You can find the times of meetings on places on campus where you'd see flyers such as the kiosk in the middle of campus (between Devilbiss Hall and Wicomico Dorm). The thing about many events is that the information is not always going to pop up somewhere. You have to be active and search for stuff that you want to be involved in. This campus has enthusiasm also, maybe not as much as other schools, but it's still there. And with each coming year, the school spirit continues to grow more with events such as the newly created pep rally or other events in progress for this semester. Sometimes some semesters start off slow, but they quickly pick up. And if you want to make a difference on campus then do so. Get involved and get friends involved, this also helps with school spirit.

SU chemistry teacher moonlights as an animal rescuer

By Lauren Mitchell
Staff Writer

As the day winds down and students leave from their last class, the teachers prepare for the next day and pack up their belongings. Most head home to eat dinner, relax for the night, or feed their pets.

In this, Orville LaCarts is no different—except the fact that when he feeds his pets he is feeding 32 dogs and over 50 cats.

LaCarts, an obvious animal lover, is a dedicated faculty member of the chemistry department. In addition to teaching several chemistry 121 and 122 labs, LaCarts provides assistance to students who need additional help with their studies. He dedicates many hours to his profession and is always willing to help.

Not only does LaCarts have a love for chemistry, but he has a love for animals as well. One might wonder why he has so many pets, but LaCarts just cannot say no to an animal without a home.

The majority of his dogs and cats are adopted animals that were in need of rescuing. Several were adopted from the Humane Society, but most were obtained because LaCarts' willingness to care for orphaned animals became known around the community.

One dog, for instance, came to live with LaCarts because his owner was going to prison. Others wandered off the street or were in jeopardy of being put down because of behavioral issues.

"Little Buddy was almost put to sleep because he was known to be snippy. But we get along just fine," says LaCarts, referring to his dachshund who likes to watch him work in his office on Saturdays. He has become very protective of LaCarts and is willing to defend him should any threat occur. Though Little Buddy is one of the smaller dogs that LaCarts has befriended, there is a wide range of sizes and breeds.

LaCarts began adopting animals 17 years ago in 1989. It began with his search for just one cat to have as a pet, and the numbers have increased drastically over time.

Perhaps his fondness towards animals came from raising cocker spaniels when he was younger. Not only has he adopted soft and cuddly animals, but LaCarts has also cared for mice, rats and a turkey.

With such a great number of animals, it is understandable that a lot of effort goes into care and feeding

Aryn Kratzmeier/The Flyer

LaCarts spends approximately three hours a night feeding the dogs and cats. And with so many hungry mouths to feed, it is no wonder many trips to the pet store are required.

"I purchase about 200 lbs of dry food, six cases of wet Friskies and eight cases of Fancy Feast a week," comments LaCarts about his frequent trips to Petsmart and Sam's Club.

Though it takes considerable time and energy to keep over 80 pets, it is evident that it is worth every second to LaCarts. Because of his caring nature and his willingness to adopt animals without a home, he has earned a reputation as an animal rescuer.

The ups and downs of RA life

By Kristen Collins
Staff Writer

No matter what year you are here at SU, there is probably a good chance that at one point in your college career you had a Resident Assistant that helped you get through the tough transitional period of school away from home.

Remember your RA's when you were a freshman. How they were always there to make you laugh and would be the mediator when there was a disagreement. But have you ever realized how much time and effort goes into being the person that is always there for you?

To become an RA one must go through a training class to learn how to handle different situations. Being an RA also takes a lot of commitment. Not only are they going to class everyday but they also have come back and live where they work.

Scott Baker, a Chesapeake RA says, "My typical day consists of going to class just like any other student here at SU. One night a week I have duty and every fourth weekend."

For the most part, a typical week is pretty calm and sometimes the weekends can get a little chaotic, but the RA's have plenty of support in case an emergency should arise.

"We are close with University Police who are always quick and helpful, not to mention a Resident Director is always on call to help," says Rachel Grap, a Nanticoke RA.

With so much responsibility, what makes a person want to become an RA?

Both Scott and Rachel say that although it can be tough at times, the job is very rewarding. They say that helping students and being hands on with residence life is a great way to feel committed to the campus.

"I wanted to be an RA because I wanted to help students make the transition between high school and the real world," says Scott.

Rachel agreed. "I want to be a teacher because I like working with people. My RA made me feel welcome and that's what I wanted to do for the incoming freshman," she explained.

However, being an RA is a selfless position and there are times when it's not so easy. Their time is not their own and sometimes it is difficult for RA's to get the space needed to work hard of RA's here at SU is humbling.

Students living on campus can rest assured knowing just how much time and effort goes into making sure their safety and comfort is secured.

to class everyday but they also have come back and live where they work.

Both Scott and Rachel say that although it can be tough at times, the job is very rewarding. They say that helping students and being hands on with residence life is a great way to feel committed to the campus.

"I wanted to be an RA because I wanted to help students make the transition between high school and the real world," says Scott.

Rachel agreed. "I want to be a teacher because I like working with people. My RA made me feel welcome and that's what I wanted to do for the incoming freshman," she explained.

However, being an RA is a selfless position and there are times when it's not so easy. Their time is not their own and sometimes it is difficult for RA's to get the space needed to work hard of RA's here at SU is humbling.

Students living on campus can rest assured knowing just how much time and effort goes into making sure their safety and comfort is secured.

Bush leads 2006 campaign for Sea Gulls baseball

By Kevin Froehlich
Sports Editor

Eric Bush is considered by many to be a legend here at Salisbury University. A man well-known and well-liked around campus, he has been a key component of some of the most insane happenings throughout his four years here. The tennis ball bomb that always blew up 501 West College Hall was holding it when it was lit. The 10-kg extravaganza that actually baffled the Salisbury police? He was a founder. And, oh yeah, he's also played a little baseball. A right-handed pitcher, his playing time has increased every season and now he will be looked upon to help anchor the starting rotation of a strong team that expects to make it back to the World Series for the first time in two years. I brought him up to the top of the Taco Bell Pizza Hut billboard for this exclusive interview.

How proud are you to be a part of the first freshman baseball class in three years to have more than one player play all four years?

It's been said that New Jersey is the armpit of America. Is Toms River the armpit of New Jersey?

Wrong. The correct answer is C, Hugh Jackman.

Didn't see that one coming, tricky Kevin.

What would you get if Chuck Norris and Vin Diesel had a baby?

Answer: God. We also would have accepted Poseidon, god of the sea.

You've gotta give me some credit for Jesus; have to keep it in the family.

Finally, if you walk out of Salisbury with a diploma, are you making a mockery of this university?

If I walk out is a great question, and I would be absolutely making a fool of the Purdue School of Business.

Who would win in a fight, Chuck Norris or Vin Diesel?

There's no doubt that Chuck Norris would roundhouse the hell out of Vin Diesel. Hands down, no doubt.

Senior second baseman Greg Lemon and Nick Pegelow, "We go where they go." Truth or methamphetamine?

I buy it.

Men's basketball falls in final home game

By Noah Wood

Staff Writer

Men's basketball fell to Catholic, 81-69, Wednesday night at the Coaches vs. Cancer Game held at Maggs Gym.

Within the first ten seconds of the game, senior Aaron Meekins scored the first points of the game. However, it did not take long for the Cardinals to catch up, and less than two minutes into the game, the score was tied 5-5. From there Catholic took a strong lead, but Salisbury senior Kyle Harmon made a shot and the score was 14-10.

After about five minutes into the game, the Cardinals extended their lead over the Sea Gulls 20-10.

SU sophomore Jonas Vaitkus made a basket with fifty-seven seconds to go in the first quarter, making the score 42-40. Shortly after, Catholic scored, but then Ray Williams made another basket with twenty seconds remaining on the clock, putting the final score for the first quarter at 44-42, with the Sea Gulls right on the Cardinals' talons.

The Sea Gulls made a basket to start the second half when Harmon assisted Darren Johnson, but Catholic answered with a 3-pointer. The Cardinals started to advance their lead and with 13 minutes to go the score was 57-52. Johnson made a basket, followed by a Rico Stewart bucket, taking the score to 65-59, Catholic ahead. Then, the Cardinals extended their lead one last time for the game and with a minute to go, the Sea Gulls were trailing by more than 10 points. Williams made the final shot for the Sea Gulls with 34.5 seconds to go, and the score was 79-69. The Cardinals were then fouled and made both of their foul shots to end the game.

The Sea Gulls, though, were still glad that they put forth a strong amount of effort to make the Cardinals battle for their victory.

"Well, we came out with a lot of heart, because it was senior night," said senior Justin Rice. "We played real well the first half, but not our best basketball, but we played well enough to get a chance to win at the end, but they just executed better down the stretch."

"I thought we came and competed real hard, but we had trouble with their post players," said head coach Steve Holmes. "They took advantage of their sizes, they had some big kids and they did a good job getting the ball in low to their big kids."

"We played good, Catholic just shot the ball real well," said Harmon. "We had a hard time keeping it out of post. It's just a shame I had to lose my last regular season home game. Now it's just time to win in the playoffs."

The next game for the Sea Gulls is scheduled for Saturday, February 18th, at St. Mary's College in St. Mary's, MD, and it will be a CAC tournament game.
